Cause of Neuralgic Headache.

The London Lancet says that the pain of the neuralgic headache experienced by women is generally: located is one or more branches of the second cervical nerve, very commonly those terminating in the sealp of the occiput. The nerves of the sealp are irritated by the strain, not as a whole, in which strain would be spread over a large area of the surface, but by small bundles of place by hair-pins. Relief is often consciously experienced as a result of removing the hair-pins, but this has only pury done it lasting in its consequences.
